Student death

Emerson freshman found dead in dorm

An Emerson College freshman died in her dorm room Tuesday night, the school's president, M. Lee Pelton, wrote in a campus-wide e-mail on Wednesday.

Honors student Jocelyn Amelia Straus, who lived in Colonial Residence Hall and studied political communication, "was a bright light taken from this world far too soon," Pelton wrote.

Pelton described her death as "unattended." GLOBE

Hailo Boston to shut down

London-based Hailo, an app-based taxi hailing service, will reportedly shut down its North American business operations, including its Boston branch.

The closure was prompted by increasing price pressure from competitors Uber and Lyft.

Hailo CEO Tom Barr said "astronomical marketing spend required to compete is making profitability for any one player almost impossible."

Hailo had nearly 2,000 cab drivers in its Boston system.

It is unclear when the company will halt service. METRO

Park ranger stabbing suspect held on $1M

Boston. The man allegedly responsible for stabbing two park rangers suffers from mental illness and has a history of violence.

A homeless man with a history of violent attacks was held on $1 million bail during an arraignment Wednesday at Boston Municipal Court on charges he allegedly stabbed two unarmed park rangers in Boston Common in a bizarre and unprovoked attack.

Bodio Hutchinson, 34, faces attempted murder charges for attacking the men around 4:50 p.m. near the Soldiers and Sailors Monument statue in the Boston Common.

One ranger, a 46-year-old man, suffered life-threatening injuries after being stabbed in his abdomen and slashed on his back. He was transported to Massachusetts General Hospital where he underwent surgery. The other ranger, age 25, was rushed to New England Medical Center with five stab wounds to his back and abdomen. Both are expected to survive.

Prosecutors said Hutchinson was brandishing a knife when the rangers approached him, and a confrontation ensued.

After the attack, Hutchinson allegedly fled the Common and entered the Boston Public Garden with responding Boston Police officers in pursuit. Hutchinson tossed an item into the lagoon, then turned on the officers chasing him.

Violent past

Hutchinson is appealing convictions for punching, kicking and biting officers at the Nashua Street Jail in 2010.

- He was in jail for allegedly beating and biting another man. The victim refused to testify against him, so Hutchinson was acquitted.
- More recently, he was convicted of punching a woman and biting a man inside a Roxbury fast-food restaurant in 2013.

Hutchinson allegedly took an aggressive posture and shouted, "Shoot me! Shoot me!" The officers instead ordered him to the ground at gunpoint and took him into custody.

Additional officers checked the lagoon where they allegedly saw Hutchinson toss the item and spotted a folding knife that was later recovered by Boston Police criminalists.

Hutchinson's defense attorney said at Wednesday's arraignment said that his client suffers from paranoid schizophrenia and "struggles every day to know what's his reality."

Hutchinson is due to back in court on Nov. 6.

S. Boston. 'Fishbowling' in focus for Phillipos

Defense lawyers on Wednesday continued to argue that Robel Phillipos, friend of accused Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, was too high on marijuana to lie to investigators about whether he went to Tsarnaev's dorm on April 18, 2013.

UMass Dartmouth student Lino Rosas, 21, testified that she and Phillipos smoked pot throughout much of that day.

"The term, if I'm correct, is 'fishbowling,' and that is basically leaving the windows completely up and letting the smoke stay in the vehicle," said Rosas. "It's to get more affected by the marijuana." REUTERS

Boston. JFK wedding photos are auctioned off

How much would you pay for wedding day photos of JFK and Jackie O.?

Someone paid tens of thousands for 13 original photos of the couple during an online auction on Wednesday. As of press time, the price tag was $27,815 and climbing.

The two who would eventually call the White House home were married on Sept. 12, 1953, in Newport, Rhode Island. Life magazine called the event — with its 700 guests at the ceremony and 1,200 at the reception — "the most impressive the old society stronghold had seen in 30 years." DANNY MCDONALD

Old State House lion time capsule's secrets are revealed, archived

The items found last week inside the time capsule have since been catalogued. / THE BOSTONIAN SOCIETY

History. The box from 1901 was opened publicly last week, but its contents had to remain undisturbed.

The old lion's inventory is in, and it includes a Teddy Roosevelt campaign button, nails from the Old South Church and a slew of newspapers.

The Bostonian Society has itemized the contents of the 1901 time capsule found inside the lion statue that was affixed to the southeast corner of Boston's Old State House and opened last week.

Elizabeth Roscio, the society's library and archives manager, has recorded the condition of each item, made an inventory and placed all the relics in acid-free folders. Roscio says the contents are, overall, in "remarkably good" condition. She has plans to make archival scans or photographs of all the materials.

There was little fading of ink or deterioration of paper quality, according to Roscio, which is most likely thanks to the seal of the lion statue. It was evidently tight enough to keep air and water out.

What's in the box?

The Bostonian Society plans to have an exhibition of the time capsule materials in the Old State House in the near future.

The capsule's relics include:

- Turn of the century business cards
- Photos of 19th century mayors
- An 1896 book on American foreign policy
- A bill for tuition signed by John A. Silver

BU union protests for higher wages

Boston University office custodians, mailroom operators, groundskeepers and skilled tradesworkers marched down Commonwealth Avenue during rush hour on Wednesday to demand a fair contract, according to the union 32BJ SEIU.

The contract covers about 700 workers, according to the union. Organizers say the university has a record $2 billion endowment, $2 billion in capital assets and $2 billion more in reserves and are calling on BU to "maintain middle-class jobs." The union and BU remain "far apart" on any new agreement, the union said. SHNS

ONEin3 is the City of Boston's term for Millennials who live in the city.

They are called "ONEin3ers" because 35 percent of the population in Boston is between the ages of 20 and 34 years old — the largest percentage in that age group among major U.S. cities.

ONEin3ers are 216,213 people strong and make up 48 percent of the Boston workforce.

In comparison, the next largest age group in Boston is 35- to 54-year-olds, who represent 23.9 percent of the population, or 147,501 people.

When broken down by neighborhoods, Allston (to no surprise) has the largest percentage of millennials than any other Boston neighborhood — 65 percent, or 18,837 people, to be exact.

The Fenway (59.2 percent), Brighton (55.7 percent) and the North End (54.8 percent) round out the most popular neighborhoods for Millennials.

However, Dorchester has the highest total number of Millennials, 28,441, and Brighton has the second-largest 20-34 population with 25,507 ONEin3ers.

By the numbers

Of ONEin3ers live in the Allston neighborhood of Boston

ONEin3ers are single (82 percent have never been married), were born outside Massachusetts (60 percent to be exact), are active (58 percent walk, bike or take the T to work) and they're a huge stimulus to the Boston economy.

Their expenditures add $1 billion per year to the Gross City Product, which in turn supports 22,241 additional jobs in Boston.

And now ONEin3ers are connected. In 2004, the City of Boston, and Mayor Thomas Menino, launched ONEin3 to connect Boston's young population with city government.

Today, ONEin3 is Boston's hub for Millennials to not only connect with each other, but also to connect with resources and events about housing, financial health, entrepreneurship, civic engagement and life in Boston.

Stup!d MONEY MYTHS Debunked!

At a FREE Workshop

The Ripple Effect

If you are living by the old money paradigm, your financial future is in serious jeopardy. Our country is still feeling the ripple effect from the 2008 financial crash. And, I believe another one is on the horizon.

You Can't Win The Game If You Don't Know The Rules

The rules have changed. Sadly, most people still operate under the old money paradigm: go to school; get a job; work hard; save; invest in a 401k, etc. How's that working out for you? For most people, it's NOT!

Investors Get Money To Work For Them

If you cling to the old money paradigm, you will have to work harder and harder. Investors get money to work for them, instead of constantly working for money. The poor and middle class buy liabilities they mistake for assets. Investors acquire assets.

Second nurse with Ebola had a slight fever on plane

Spread. Although the risk for other passengers was low, the CDC said the nurse should not have been traveling.

A second Texas nurse who contracted Ebola flew on a commercial flight from Ohio to Texas with a slight temperature the day before she was diagnosed, health officials said on Wednesday, raising new concerns about U.S. efforts to control the disease.

Chances that other passengers on the plane were infected were very low, but the nurse should not have been traveling on the flight, U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention director Dr. Thomas Frieden told reporters.

The woman, Amber Vinson, 29, was isolated immediately after reporting a fever on Tuesday, Texas Department of State Health Services officials said.

She had treated Liberian patient Thomas Eric Duncan, who died of Ebola on Oct. 8 and was the first patient diagnosed with the virus in the United States.

Vinson, a worker at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital in Dallas, had taken a Frontier Airlines flight from Cleveland, Ohio to Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport on Monday, officials said.

In Washington, President Barack Obama said the likelihood of a widespread Ebola outbreak was "very, very low." But he pledged a more aggressive response to U.S. Ebola cases from federal officials and to do everything possible to ensure no more health care workers are infected.

Obama met with Cabinet officials to discuss the government's response to the Ebola situation after canceling a planned political trip to New Jersey and Connecticut.

Government officials said Vinson was being transferred to Emory University Hospital in Atlanta, which has successfully treated two people who contracted the disease in West Africa and were flown back to the U.S. REUTERS

Obama says health response teams readied

President Barack Obama said the government is forming rapid response teams of health specialists who can be on-site within 24 hours anywhere a patient is diagnosed with Ebola in the U.S.

As public concern over the spread of Ebola rises following the infection of two nurses in Dallas, Obama said the government is working to ensure that hospitals have proper protocols and training in place to contain the disease.

The federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention also is reviewing every step taken at the Dallas hospital that treated a Liberian man who has since died of Ebola, to determine what went wrong, he said. BLOOMBERG

Time Warner to launch HBO streaming service

Strategy. It could be a further catalyst spurring people to dump their cable subscriptions.

Time Warner Inc.'s HBO will launch a stand-alone online streaming service next year to make hit shows such as "Game of Thrones" available to people who do not subscribe to cable television.

The move to take HBO "over-the-top" — media jargon that means consumers can watch the channel with only a broadband connection —is a significant milestone for a channel long dependent on cable distributors.

HBO's chief executive, Richard Plepler, announced the move during an investor day on Wednesday where Time Warner's other top executives laid out plans to boost the company's growth.

Plepler cited that 10 million homes in the United States are broadband-only, without cable subscriptions. Half of those homes subscribe to streaming video services. "These consumers have no access to HBO. It's a large opportunity that should not be untapped," he said.

Netflix Inc. shares were down 3.1 percent at $435.28 after the announcement.

"In 2015 we will go beyond the wall and launch a stand-alone, over-the-top service with the potential to produce hundreds of millions in revenue," Plepler said. "We will use all means at our disposal to grow. This is the most exciting inflection point both domestically and internationally in the modern history of HBO." REUTERS

U.S. drivers are reaping the benefit of the strong global crude production and weak demand that are causing oil prices to drop more than a quarter since June. / GETTY IMAGES

Regular gasoline in the U.S. fell to the lowest level in more than three-and-a-half years as shale oil production and weak global demand spurred a four-month slump in oil prices.

U.S. drivers are reaping the benefit of strong global crude production and weak demand causing oil prices to drop more than a quarter since June.

"That's like somebody putting dollars right in your pocket," said David Hackett, president of Stillwater Associates, an energy consulting firm in Irvine, California. "That sounds like Christmas presents, going out to dinner, being able to do something."

The average retail price fell 0.9 cents a gallon to $3.177, Heathrow, Florida-based motoring group AAA said on its website.

Lawsuit. GM is sued for $10 billion over losses on 27 million vehicles

General Motors Co. was hit with its biggest lawsuit so far over serial recalls, brought on behalf of drivers of 27 million vehicles seeking more than $10 billion in compensation for fallen car prices.

The would-be class action against GM aims to represent everyone who bought or leased a recalled car from July 2009 to July 2014 and still owns it, or who sold it after mid-February when the recalls started, or who had an accident that destroyed it after that date.

"New GM repeatedly proclaimed that it was a company committed to innovation, safety, and maintaining a strong brand," according to the filing. "The value of all GM-branded vehicles has diminished as a result of the widespread publication of those defects and New GM's corporate culture of ignoring and concealing safety defects."

Hundreds of individual car-price complaints against GM were combined in two separate class actions, according to a Web post by one of the lawyers against GM.

A smaller one, focused on ignition-switch faults in cars made before the bailout, may be curtailed by a bankruptcy judge's ruling next year on whether older claims for accidents and economic losses are allowed. GM has asked the judge to rule that his earlier orders, which enabled the U.S. to rescue the stumbling company, bar most of the claims over old cars.

According to the suits, 2010 and 2011 Chevy Camaros lost $2,000 in value as a result of recalls. The price drop of the 2009 Pontiac Solstice is $2,900. BLOOMBERG

GM spurred the price drops by hiding at least 60 serious defects in around 27 million vehicles sold in the U.S., according to the complaint filed Tuesday in federal court in Manhattan against "New GM."

1 Harry Styles heading in the wrong direction

Harry Styles' friends are worried about him — and with good reason. Styles was recently photographed in the natural habitat of a 20-year-old celebrity on a break from his pop group's arena tour: puking his guts out on the side of an LA freeway the morning after a night out with Lily Allen. You know, that old story. While he's been getting sick, his friends have been worried sick. "He has been worrying everyone for quite some time now," a source tells Radar Online. "Those close to him have urged him to slow down. But he lives by the seam of his pants and thinks that he is invincible. Clearly, he is not." Could this source have meant to say "by the seat of his pants"? I'm not familiar with what living by the "seam" of your pants is, exactly, but hey, language is a fluid beast. Boot and rally, Harry. Boot and rally.

Harry Styles is looking a little bit Wolverine-ish these days, and apparently he's behaving like an animal, too!

2 Gaga gets engaged

Lady Gaga and her "Chicago Fire" star beau, Taylor Kinney, have reportedly pledged their love to each other or something like that in a private commitment ceremony, according to the Daily Star. The couple reportedly had a commitment ceremony of sorts before family and close friends at New York City restaurant Joan Trattoria recently. "Gaga wanted something visual, a commitment ceremony with the people who matter the most," a source says. Good to see they didn't go full-on Kanye with it and rent out a stadium.

3 NPH one step closer to a hosting-EGOT

NEIL PATRICK HARRIS REALLY KNOWS HOW TO ROCK A TUX.

It might have seemed inevitable, but it's still news: Two-time Emmy Awards and four-time Tony Awards host Neil Patrick Harris has been tapped for the big show. The "Gone Girl" and "How I Met Your Mother" star will serve as host for the 87th Academy Awards on February 22, 2015, producers Craig Zadan and Neil Meron announced today. Harris has earned four Emmys for his work hosting the Tonys. He has also previously served as host for Spike Video Game Awards.

4 Chris Brown weighs in on Ebola — finally!

You stay classy, Chris Brown.

Oh, Chris Brown. You just can't help yourself, can you? The embattled singer decided to ruminate a bit on the current Ebola crisis, and the results are, well, this: "I don't know … But I think this Ebola epidemic is a form of population control. S— is getting crazy bruh." Indeed, bruh. He did at least follow that up with "Let me shut my black ass up!" To be fair, though, a trip through Brown's Twitter timeline is always a risky endeavor. In what I'm assuming is a response to criticism over his Ebola comments, he tweeted, "I say what I want. If u don't like it.... 'SUCK MY ASS' (little Asian girl voice)" which, to be sure, is absolutely charming and not offensive in the least. And more recently, apropos of nothing but cringe-worthy just because it was Brown writing it, we have: "Ain't nothing like a real supportive woman."

5 Selena Gomez is ashamed of you

YOU HAVEN'T DONE HALF OF WHAT SELENA GOMEZ HAS DONE, YOU FOOLISH MORTAL!

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Kids can be tough enough, but Selena Gomez says she's had to put up with grown-up haters, too. And she's had it! "I get picked on by grown adults all the time," Gomez tells E! News. "It just baffles me. I wish I could just sit them down and say, 'What were you doing at 15? What were you doing at 18? What were you doing at 21?' Because I can guarantee you it's not half of what I've done.'" Maybe the "whatever, loser" card isn't exactly the high road she seems to think it is. But apparently it's working? "Trust me, it's hard. I've had my moments where I've let them get to me, but I refuse to let them win," she says. Now if you'll excuse me, I have to go think about what I was doing at 15. And it ain't pretty.

Q&A
KIRSTEN DUNST
MORE ROLES FOR WOMEN

The "Two Faces of January" star talks comedy and the pestering paparazzi.

There are only three main characters in the new thriller "The Two Faces of January," and Kirsten Dunst plays the only woman. (The other two are Viggo Mortensen, as a fraudster, and Oscar Isaac, as a con man.) But at least that's better than no women.

"I know when I watch movies and it's only about boys, and there's no interesting female characters, I don't end up liking it much," Dunst confesses at a recent press meet for "January." In fact, the film, based on Patricia Highsmith's 1964 novel, could have wound up being one of those. For whatever reason, Highsmith was mostly drawn to male characters; her females tend to be boring blanks. Her writer-director, Hossein Amini ("Drive"), did his part to flesh her out, and left the rest to Dunst.

"I wanted Colette to be as much of a character as I could. It was there on the page, but then it's also about the guys," Dunst says. "That was probably the hardest thing for me, to make her as full as possible. She could have easily been a throwaway role."

In the future, Dunst would prefer to do more female-heavy films, and even comedies, for which she isn't always known, despite starring in the likes of "Dick," "Bring It On" and "Bachelorette." She says there's one project she's debating: a "straight-up girls stoner comedy," as she describes it.

"I love comedies, and I don't think there's enough good female ones," she says. "I love working with women, and you don't even get to do that very often. That's why I did 'Bachelorette' — I wanted to have fun with girls my age. You hardly ever get to work with other women."

All-girl films, she says, are very different: "You're not playing the love interest. You don't have to do that stuff."

Quoted

Snip-snap

Dunst on the media

Dunst is inevitably asked about the recent nude photo leaks, of which she was a victim. She doesn't answer at first, but chuckles angrily when she learns that one of the men behind it has been complaining about having photos of him spreading online: "Well, now he has to deal with the FBI."

The real paparazzi practically pale in comparison for an old hat like Dunst. Her "January" co-star, Viggo Mortensen, says they got bored with him after he kept giving them boring photos. But they never tire of hounding Dunst.

"They're worse to women," Dunst says. "I live in the Valley in Los Angeles, which is as low-key as you can get for living in L.A. ... There's this one gym, and a lot of girls go there, a lot of models. That's the one spot they sit at in the Valley. And every day they just get you coming out, sweaty. But it never gets old. I'm like, 'How do they keep selling this dumb picture of me in workout gear?' I don't look any different. I wear the same thing, pretty much."

Jonathan Blake lives on

Interview. One of the first men in the U.K. diagnosed with HIV talks to us about the new film "Pride."

The charming and heart-warming new film "Pride" tells the surprising true story of an LGBT group who rallied to support British mine workers in 1984. But nestled within is the equally inspiring story of Jonathan Blake, one of the group's members and one of the first men in the U.K. diagnosed with HIV. Blake, who just celebrated his 65th birthday, shared some of his story with us.

His first reaction

"I was diagnosed with HIV in October 1982, very early on. And in those days it was a death sentence, so I took it badly. That December, I tried to commit suicide, but being totally anal, I couldn't bear the thought of somebody having to come and clear up the mess after me. And so I thought, all right, if that's the case then you'd better get on and live."

What it felt like to see a film based on his life

"We had done this big benefit, Pits and Perverts, in the Electric Ballroom in Camden, and [the film's distributor] Pathe had basically taken it over for the premiere afterparty. On top of that, they had got Jimmy Somerville from Bronski Beat, who had sung at the original, to sing. He started singing, and you were zipped straight back to 1984. We all thought that we would take this history to our graves, and that would be that."

Seeing Dominic West play you — sort of

"I'm very happy to be Dominic's Jonathan. It's very, very strange. But I never felt that I was being portrayed, but the intentions are there. Obviously it isn't me, but there is that sort of sense. And I like him."

Not slowing down

Learning to live with his status

"I've always kept busy. That was the important thing. The more one did, you didn't have to think about the virus, dying, dealing with stuff. Because it was a wretched time; the gay community was being decimated by this virus. I'm 65, I'm still here. I should've been dead years ago. And there's a strange sort of thing, which is survival guilt. ... But for me, the essential thing was to keep busy, keep moving and maybe it will just miss you. So I did!"

Crying babies are deadly weapons

Comedy. Web comic maestro Zach Weinersmith brings his bad science competition back to MIT.

Cori McLean covers the finer points of why everything tastes like chicken. / NICOLE TEENY

In a groundbreaking presentation at MIT last year, doctoral student Tomer Ullman showcased decades of research into babies crying. The sound had long been known to increase fight-or-flight response, and a 2012 Oxford University study had just shown "infant distress vocalizations [to] enhance effortful motor activity" — so basically hearing babies wailing improves whack-a-mole scores. Ullman then announced his revolutionary theory: Babies cry so obnoxiously because their toteable size makes them the ultimate military accessory. Warriors who brought them to battle would fight harder.

This theory is, of course, incredibly stupid.

Ullman was presenting at the first now-annual BAHfest, a celebration (and competition) of silly, Bad Ad Hoc Hypotheses in evolution created by Zach Weinersmith, the cartoonist behind Web comic "Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal." It returns to MIT this weekend.

"Science presentations are a platform for comedy no one had used before," says Weinersmith, who presented his own theory about infantapaulting. "I picked evolutionary biology because it's understandable by everyone."

Ullman's presentation took first prize — a bust of Darwin begrudgingly shrugging.

"The secret was to present something that kinda, almost, sorta made sense in as serious a tone as possible," Ullman says.

His seriousness is what sold his presentation. The citations — even the bafflingly scientific phrase "infant distress vocalization" — were entirely real.

Most applicants for the competition are grad students. Ullman, for one, got involved in the contest in the most grad student way possible.

"I had a more important paper I was supposed to be writing," he says. "So I did this instead."

Other presentations included speculation into why fish had never evolved higher intelligence: It prevents them from having existential crises about their pointless, brief lives. All in all, it was a bigger success than even Weinersmith could have anticipated.

The debut event was supposed to take place in a 50-seat auditorium. Due to an unanticipated rescheduling caused by the marathon bombing, BAHfest One was moved to a 500-seat arena. To Weinersmith's surprise, the event filled nonetheless.

He promises this year's BAHfest will be bigger and better. It's bigger now that he sees enough interest to expand: He's now hosting separate contests on both coasts. It's better now that more people get it's a joke.

"The first time, a lot of people didn't get the idea," says Weinersmith. "We got a lot of submissions saying 'I think this idea might be true.'"

Weinersmith insists there is no greater point to the exercise than silliness. It's not intended to mock the implausibility or constant ad-hoc-ness of evolutionary theories ("I'd hope no one is holding back ideas because of us," he says) and his greatest fear is that creationists see it as an opportunity to say the show proves their point.

But the line between earnestly joking and publishable science is slim.

"A few weeks after I did my presentation, I saw a real paper [called] 'Babies Cry to Prevent Siblings,'" Ullman says.

Caroline de Maigret: 'Anyone can be Parisian'

Interview. The model's new book unravels the "je ne sais quoi" behind French style.

"Anyone in the world can be Parisian — it's all about the attitude," says Maigret. / PROVIDED

"People praise the effortlessness of French women, but they don't realize that it's actually an effort to look effortless," says Caroline de Maigret, glancing down at her black sweater, skinny Lee jeans and Stan Smith sneakers. Born an aristocrat, the 39-year-old has never exactly slummed it. Her new book, "How to Be Parisian Wherever You Are: Love, Style, and Bad Habits" — co-written by journalist Audrey Diwan, writer Anne Berest and movie producer Sophie Bas — could read as an ode to the privileged, but the style tome steers clear of preachiness, instead debunking myths in an ironic look at the lives of French women.

How did you come up with the idea to write this book?
Every time I travel abroad, I'm asked about "La Parisienne." So I would get a lot a questions, but I also realized that there were a lot of cliches around the Parisian lady, who has kind of been crowned the "ideal woman." It's strange for me because "La Parisienne" is actually a lady who doesn't try to be anyone else or to reach perfection but learns how to deal with who she is and how to play with her flaws instead of fighting them. So with my three friends, we decided to show that these women were everything but perfect.

The subhead of the book is 'Love, Style, and Bad Habits.' What are your bad habits?
My bad habits would be my contradictions such as eating a pizza and having a coffee sweetened with a Splenda. But I consider these bad habits good ones because they are the salt of life, which makes all of this a fun adventure.

Who do you think is the chicest Parisian woman?
Charlotte Rampling is unbelievably beautiful and incredibly chic. She is feminine with an androgynous edge and, most importantly, she is a bright woman. She might be British, but she is one of the most Parisian people ever — just like Jane Birkin or Romy Schneider, who were born abroad but epitomize Parisian style, which is precisely why we made this book. Anyone in the world can be Parisian; it's all about the attitude.

Quoted

"They aren't really my thing but I do like clutch bags — they're chic for nighttime. But during the day, I just use my pockets as a bag. I'm not crazy about jewelry, although I do have a few pairs of dangling earrings for when I want to be sexy. And I love a man's Rolex."

Who is the chicest man?
I always say Keith Richards, but my man [French musician] Yarol Poupaud is probably the most stylish man I know. I steal all his clothes — he is the one who taught me to have fun with my style.

Do you wear makeup?
Usually I wear brown mascara, because it makes my eyes look less severe and younger, and I switch to black at night. I'm a big fan of the Yves Saint Laurent Touche Eclat that I use to brighten the eyes, but also as a normal concealer. I put some NARS Sumatra Multiple on my cheeks, but I almost never wear foundation. Even though I don't wear a lot of makeup, I just designed a collection for Lancome, which will be released in September 2015.

How do you take care of your body?
Fashion Month was very busy, and I just had my first workout session in a while yesterday. I can't even walk today! I'm lucky enough to have my own coach who comes to my place, but I hate working out. Then again, I know it's good for my health and it allows me to eat more. Since the birth of my son, Anton, I've been trying to eat organic as much as possible. I also try to go easy on fats and dairy, so if I have a cheeseburger for lunch, I will have a light dinner.

Inspirations

Who is your favorite fashion designer?
Karl Lagerfeld. What I love about Karl is the way he sees women. He is always ahead of his time: He knows everything about fashion, literature and the arts in general. I think that fashion is linked to society, even if for me it's just a way to have fun, and he knows exactly how to transfer society to fashion, without ever forgetting to add in some humor.

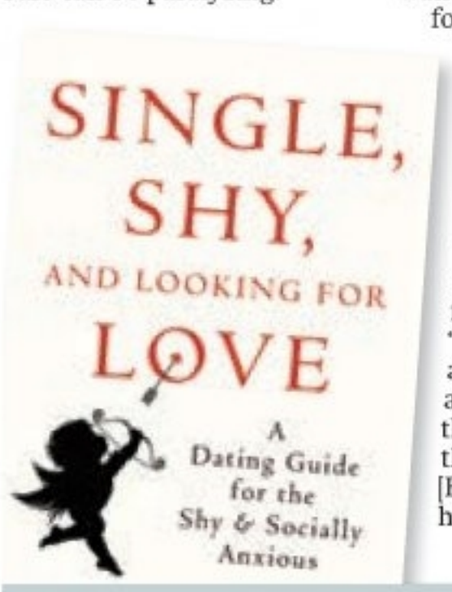
A dating guide for the socially anxious

Tips. Looking for love doesn't have to be so hard.

Dating can be a nerve-wracking experience for even the most confident person out there. For anxious singles, navigating the world of coffee dates, online profiles and bars can be paralyzing.

Dr. Shannon Kolakowski, a psychologist and the author of the new book "Single, Shy, and Looking for Love: A Dating Guide for the Shy and Socially Anxious," insists that the search for a partner doesn't have to break your heart or your spirit. "I am sort of a hopeless romantic," she says. "I want people to be happy and to be in a relationship if they want to be." We asked her for her tips for anxious daters.



Accept yourself

A lack of self-confidence and self-acceptance are two of the biggest problems anxious people face, says Kolakowski. "You can learn how to accept your anxiety," she advises. "People think that if there is anxiety, that means I can't date. [But] my anxiety doesn't have to define me."

Practice makes perfect when it comes to dating. / COLOURBOX

Don't take all the blame

One of the worst things an anxious person can do while dating is assume all of the blame when things don't work out. "Remember that dating is 50-50," says Kolakowski. "It's not all on your shoulders." Obviously, your dating partner plays a big part in how things ultimately turn out. "Dating doesn't always work out, and that's OK," she reminds readers.

You can do it

Anxious people tend to endlessly ruminate on mistakes. In those cases, Kolakowski urges clients to take a step back. "Why are they telling themselves this story?" she asks. "Because these are all stories. ... You can say, 'My story can include love again.'"

LAKSHMI GANDHI
@LakshmiGandhi
lakshmi.gandhi@metro.us

One more tip

Define your ultimate goals

"What is it that you want from your life?" asks Kolakowski. "How can we reprioritize to get what you want? Are you valuing your anxiety over a potential relationship?"

If you feel like you are letting your anxiety run your life, working on relaxation techniques and tracking your emotions can help you separate your social anxiety from the reality of the situation. "It is only going to get easier with time," says Kolakowski.

Singles. There is a dating site out there for everyone if you know where to look

The names of dating sites like Match, OKCupid and Plenty of Fish are instantly recognizable to both daters and non-daters alike. But what about those singles who are looking for an online community that's a bit more select? Turns out you're in luck — there seems to be a dating site for just about every interest, religious group and community imaginable. Here are three of the unique ones we found.

You can be as happy as this couple one day. / COLOURBOX

Geek2Geek

This site bills itself as a "safe, friendly and easy-to-use site where geeks and their admirers can find each other." Looking for the gamer or comic book fan of your dreams? This might be the site for you.

Farmers Only

Nine years ago, public relations executive Jerry Miller began Farmers Only — a site whose goal is to help "farmers and ranchers to meet like-minded people." On the site's official blog, Miller says that he came up with the idea after meeting a recently divorced farmer who was talking with him about her struggles to find a compatible date. Interested? Take note that users (quite naturally) are almost all from the rural United States and Canada.

No Longer Lonely

Living with a mental illness can be an isolating experience. All of No Longer Lonely's members have received a diagnosis of some form of mental illness, conditions that include schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, depression and obsessive-compulsive disorder. "For those with mental illness, the problem is compounded by fear of disclosure and stigma," reads the site's mission statement. No Longer Lonely hopes to help eliminate those fears for its users. Throw a bone to these 'Hunks and Hounds'

A new charity calendar for dog welfare displays both bark and brawn. Louie's Legacy Animal Rescue, a New York City-based organization, recently released its annual "Hunks and Hounds" 2015 calendar. The proceeds from the calendar — available at www.louieslegacy.org — go toward saving dogs from "high kill shelters" and helping with medical expenses. Photographer Mike Louis explains how a beautiful body and an adorable doggy raise awareness for a worthy cause.

How did you come up with the name of the calendar, "Hunks and Hounds"?
I felt that combining two very marketable commodities — sex and cute puppies — was a guaranteed success.

Do you think dogs are sexy?
I think dogs are beautiful in so many ways. They are so loyal, loving and unconditional. I've never thought of any dog as being sexy, though.

Do you think a guy can use his dog to charm women?
I would hate to think that someone would get a dog just to use it as a chick magnet, but if you love and respect your dog, I don't see the harm in teaming up to charm the pants off people!

Did the models enjoy the experience?
The models are all dog-lovers, and since I have worked with most of them before, they happily agreed to donate their time.

Do you have pets yourself?
I have always been sensitive to the well-being of animals. I used to cry as a young boy when I watched documentaries about wolves eating rabbits. That sensitivity has grown exponentially since I adopted a sweet pit bull named Oliver.

Celebs vs. canines

Is it easier to photograph Kim Kardashian or a dog?
Ha! Trick question! I've worked with Kim several times, so she is actually a pleasure to photograph. Dogs are very gratifying to photograph but can be a little distracted at times, unlike Kim Kardashian, who has razor-sharp focus.

Study. Cat bites linked with depression

Cat-lovers will be sad to learn that their feline friend might be a sign of poor mental health, according to new research. A study, led by Dr. David Hanauer, lecturer of clinical and biomedical informatics at the University of Michigan, found that of 1.3 million patients, depression was found in 41.3 percent of patients with cat bites and only 28.7 percent with dog bites. Surprisingly, 85.5 percent of those with cat bites were women, which suggests that screening for depression could be apt for patients who present to a clinical provider with a cat bite. We chatted with Hanauer, who last month won the Public Health award at the Ig Nobels, a ceremony honoring odd yet genuine scientific research.

A CAT / GETTY IMAGES

Hanauer says he began investigating the correlation between these seemingly disparate health issues after patients came into hospitals with bites and were later found to be depressed.

"We are not saying that the bites themselves cause depression," he says, "but the bite was what brought a lot of people to the clinic or hospital since it had to be taken care of."

But that's not where the association ends.

"There is some evidence suggested by the work of others that Toxoplasmosis gondii (a parasite known to infect cats and people) could cause mental illness in humans," says Hanauer.

How about Hanauer himself? Has he ever been bitten by a cat?

"I had cats when I was younger," he says, "and I am sure I was bitten, but never so deep that I had to go to the doctor." DMITRY BELYAEV, MWN

Bar offers something new to a traditional crowd

Thursty. Tap Trailhouse may have a broad demographic, but they keep the menu fresh.

Break out your pre-Revolutionary War side at Tap Trailhouse. / DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

When you're opening a new bar or rebranding an old one, you have to strike a balance between intention and execution. Considering that it's coming off of one of the better rebrandings in recent years, turning the bland Noche into the fine Wink & Nod, Boston Nightlife Ventures has earned the benefit of the doubt when it comes to its latest offering, The Tap Trailhouse.

As with Wink & Nod, they've looked to the past for inspiration here, albeit a bit further back than the speakeasy era. They went with a colonial inspiration, which shows in some of the menu items (such as a chicken and barley stew with root vegetables served in an iron skillet) and the decor, which hews toward country pantry (the low ceilings, bright reds and yellows, rough wood floors). But it mostly looks like a local pub.

This is Faneuil Hall, not the South End, so while a little experimentation is in order, you can't stray too far afield.

"That's half the fun of it, being able to work with all demographics," says Mike Boughton, the beverage director for Boston Nightlife Ventures. "We definitely appeal to the business crowd, happy hour crowd, and we get a lot of residents living in the North End coming over to see us. But at the same time that strip there has a 21-to-25 demographic that we still want to cater to as well."

The cocktail menu moves from what Boughton calls "colonial style recipes," such as a Privateer rum, black tea, cinnamon and lemon juice iced-tea style tall drink that's nicely dry and tannic, to the Colonial Flip, made with Bully Boy rum, molasses, Angostura bitters, egg white and a Harpoon Porter, then garnished with nutmeg.

Beer cocktails are a big part of the menu, like the Old 'Gansett, made with Brugal anejo, lime, mint and Narragansett lager. The Fallen Leaves is made with the house cranberry cordial, Oloroso sherry and pumpkin beer.

"It really brings out all the fall flavors and some nuttiness," Boughton says. The Cold Apple Pie has been a hit, with its apple pie cordial (rum infused with apples, cinnamon, clove and nutmeg) and Bantam Wunderkind Cider.

Beer drinkers will find the list appealing. The 24 taps are all from New England-based breweries, with no premium domestics available.

Smaller flights can be had, too. The Massachusetts ale flight features the Slumbrew Happy Sol, Bad Martha Martha's Vineyard Ale, Blatant IPA and Harpoon Boston Stout.

"There are so many local breweries that really don't get tapped into as much as they should," Boughton says. "If someone asks for a Bud Light, Coors Light, etc., we try to steer them into the direction of something comparable, but local."

Humble roots

Roommate ruminations

Allen currently lives in New York and his roommate is one of his childhood best friends. "We met when we were 5 years old, playing soccer, and we went to high school together. He doesn't have anything to do with the music industry at all," Allen says.

Another one of his close friends is college buddy RJ Ferguson, who coproduced this album as he did "All American" and most of the mixtapes.

Join the party. You first heard about the frat-rap king years ago, but he is only now releasing his first full album.

Visit Metro.us to hear our frat-rap playlist.

Hoodie Allen, aka Steven Markowitz, might not be the University of Pennsylvania frat boy he was a few years ago, but he hasn't outgrown the urge to throw one heck of a rager. "I'm trying to plan a secret party for 200 fans for the album release," he says. The album, "People Keep Talking," dropped Tuesday, coming after his self-released EP "All American" and five mixtapes.

His friends Max Schneider and Ed Sheeran are both featured on the album. "Working with Ed was cool because we've been friends for a while, but I think there's a difference between being friends and getting into the studio where you both have your own way of doing things," he says.

"The core of the album is really about believing in what you're doing and your ability," Allen says. "It's OK to do things that aren't traditional and that people might question as long as you believe you're doing the right thing."

That belief has been the theme of Allen's music career thus far. After graduating, he got a job at Google, which he quit in 2011 to pursue music full time.

"At the time, it was something I felt really good about, but I noticed other people around me were a little unsure," he says.

People might keep talking, but it's unlikely they're still expressing uncertainty.

When we first saw the name of this guitar-and-drums duo, we expected a spaced-out psychedelic circus, but they're actually a grunge band with a pop streak similar to Nirvana. Many bands today sound like the '90s, but these guys are the '90s — if you didn't know better you'd think they were a lost band from the grunge era.

Popular music is a strange beast, always changing on the surface, but always the same at its core. Internet sensation Scott Bradlee proves it with his group, cleverly reworking contemporary pop hits in older styles, from Irish folk ballads to classic Motown. Even in radically different sonic contexts, the basic song remains amusingly unchanged — sometimes it's even better.

You won't need to look far for help. Your family and friends will do everything possible to assist you. Take seriously the advice given to you.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21.
It is easy to get carried away when you go out shopping or spend time with someone who has more money than you. Plan ahead, and be prudent.

Expect to encounter a troubling relationship issue. If you have been insensitive to someone who looks up to you, it's best to do a little backtracking.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18.
Protect your position and reputation. Think before you act, and keep your ideas to yourself for the time being. A rash decision will end up being a costly mistake.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20.
You will be pulled in several different directions. It's impossible to please everyone, so listen carefully to what others have to say and make the best choice for your situation.

Obama has Ebola experts

Re: 'Uncertainty over Ebola' (Metro, Oct. 15) I guess that letter writer Sal Giarranti has graduated from medical school and has knowledge allowing him to challenge President Obama and Gov. Deval Patrick on their claims about Ebola's transmission. I would remind him that the President of the U.S. as well as any governor have advisers and staff members with expertise in several topics, including medicine, and their job is to provide the right information to their bosses.

Think of a better way

Re: 'Corporations are parasites' (Metro, Oct. 14) There's a line from "Monty Python": "I think we should put a tax on all foreigners living abroad." They were joking, but that's essentially what we do by trying to tax the foreign operations of corporations. The impulse is understandable: Corporations should not be able to hide U.S. income by shifting the accounting overseas. But taxing a company based on the location of its nominal headquarters can't work. We would be better off with other options, such as a wealth tax.

Patriots storylines to watch versus Jets

NFL The Jets limp into Gillette Stadium tonight having lost their last five games.

The Pats and Jets are on an even playing field at least when it comes to fatigue. Both teams are working on three days rest and both teams faced big challenges this past Sunday.

The Jets were at home, but had to face the dominant Broncos. They lost, 31-17. The Patriots were facing the perfectly average Bills, but had to grab their 37-22 win on the road.

Here are three things to keep tabs on tonight (8:30 p.m., CBS):

MATT BURKE
@BurkeMetroBos
matthew.burke@metro.us

REX RYAN IS MOST DEFINITELY ON THE HOT SEAT WITH THE JETS OWNING A 1-5 RECORD. GETTY IMAGES

1 Ryan's last stand

Rex Ryan isn't as brash, the overall talent on the roster is no longer at an elite level and the Jets are back to playing the role of the NFL's circus clown. Yup, the Patriots-Jets rivalry is back to being a rivalry basically in name only, because New York isn't living up to its end of the bargain.

Since they upset the Patriots at Gillette in the 2010 divisional round, New York has gone 23-32 under Ryan. Five of those 32 losses have come from their neighbors to the North and the Jets have won just one game against the Pats since the 2010 playoff game. New York actually won the last Pats-Jets meeting, a 30-27 nail-biter at the Meadowlands on Oct. 20, 2013, thanks — in large part — to a questionable "unsportsman-like conduct" penalty on Chris Jones. The Patriots are well aware that Ryan and the Jets are no pushover, despite the subpar record.

"[Ryan] tests every part of your game," Patriots quarterback Tom Brady said. "I do have a lot of respect for that from a coaching standpoint, that he challenges you and when he feels like he has you on something he sticks with it. We've had our share of good games and he's had his share of good games. It makes for a great matchup. They're a great rivalry and we've had a lot of meaningful games against them."

The Jets nearly beat the Pats at Gillette early in 2013 as well, falling 13-10. That game was on a rainy Thursday night. Tonight's short-week tilt is also expected to have some weather issues, with rain in the forecast.

2 Gotta give Gronk, Brady some help

Rob Gronkowski and Tom Brady are both back to shredding defenses after slow starts to the 2014 season. Brady has targeted No. 87 a combined 20 times in the past two weeks and it's no coincidence that it has resulted in two big Patriots victories.

Gronkowski caught a season-high seven balls against the Bills last Sunday and finished with 94 yards receiving. So far this season, "Gronk" has touchdown receptions in four of six games.

While the tight end and quarterback are surely now on the same page, both players did take a physical beating against the Bills. The Patriots would surely welcome some offensive help, particularly from the backfield, with such a quick turnaround this week.

Shane Vereen will likely get double-digit carries for the first time this season. Brandon Bolden, James White and/or Jonas Gray will also see some action in the New England running game. The Jets run defense certainly ain't what it used to be and can't — to borrow a familiar Jets phrase — "stop a nosebleed."

Denver's Ronnie Hillman ran for 100 yards in the Broncos' 31-17 win over New York last Sunday and San Diego's Branden Oliver torched the Jets for 114 yards in the Chargers' 31-0 win in Week 5.

3 Another QB feast for Patriots 'D'

The Patriots haven't exactly faced a murderer's row of quarterbacks early in the 2014 season. They've seen Ryan Tannehill, Matt Cassel, Derek Carr, Alex Smith, Andy Dalton and Kyle Orton thus far. None of them were able to crack the 300-yard mark against the Patriots' defense and only Smith and Dalton were able to register a QB rating over 100. Stunningly, Jets quarterback Geno Smith will be — statistically — the worst signal-caller the Pats have faced thus far as the second-year man out of West Virginia is averaging just 189.8 yards per game through the air. That's 34th worst in the league among quarterbacks.

The Pats are giving up just 208.5 yards through the air this season, the third-best mark in the league, so it could be another long night for the embattled Jets quarterback.

New England's pass defense should feast right now while it still can, because it will be facing some Pro Bowl-caliber arms soon enough in Peyton Manning (Nov. 2), Andrew Luck (Nov. 16), Matthew Stafford (Nov. 23), Aaron Rodgers (Nov. 30) and Philip Rivers (Dec. 7).
